Rev. Patrick G. Malone, S.J.

June 28, 1918 - February 26, 2001

Born in Belfast, Northern Ireland, Patrick Malone joined the Jesuits in Guelph, Ontario in 1936. After the regular course of Jesuit studies, he was ordained a priest in 1949. In 1951 he was assigned to St. Mary's University in Halifax, where he worked first as Professor, then as Dean, and finally as Rector.

In 1959 he was appointed Rector, then President of Loyola College, positions he held until 1974. During Father Malone's tenure the College underwent tremendous physical expansion, with the construction of the Drummond Science Building (1961), Hingston Hall (1964), the Vanier Library (1964), the Athletic Complex (1967), Langley Hall (1967), the Bryan Building (1968) and the Campus Centre (1973). These were also the years when Loyola College was putting considerable effort into obtaining its own university charter, an effort which ultimately did not meet with success. In the early '70s the Quebec Government told Loyola to merge with one of the existing Quebec universities, at which point negotiations began with Sir George Williams University, with Fr. Malone leading the Loyola negotiating team. Those negotiations led to the merger of Loyola and Sir George into Concordia University in 1974. When Fr. Malone resigned as President in March, 1974, he was the dean of Canadian university presidents, having served as President for 15 years, a considerable feat since that period included the turbulent '60s.

After his time in Montreal, Fr. Malone worked for the Development Office of the Gregorian University in Rome (4 years), then in Halifax (11 years) and Winnipeg (6 years), serving in both places as Superior of the Jesuit Community and working in the area of spiritual direction. In 1997 declining health necessitated his move to Pickering, Ontario where he continued his work in spiritual direction until his death last week.

Patrick Malone touched many souls during his 66 years in the religious life. He was a man dedicated to serving God and His people, and will be remembered by all who had the pleasure of knowing him.
